Hat-bands, shoulder knots, and umbrella bows, whose ends fluttered bravely in the breeze and waved defiance at each other, helped, we are sure, to encourage the players. To the sorrow of many, but to the infinite joy of a few, the Gunnerys came out victorious. To crown the excitement of the day, we all went up to Hickory Hearth to the last Fireside Meeting. Ruth Knowles won the Banner and the Fero with a Kiro, and the applause which followed proved too much for poor Rex, who fled in terror to the skirts of his mistress. It was his first Fireside, you know. Perhaps he thought we were trying to initiate him into the Pansy Garten. One day this month, girls sat with fingers weary and worn, with eyelids heavy and red, plying not needles, but pencils, for the Fourth Term Algebra examination was going on. All the week before, girls were muttering equations under their breath, and we, who were free from such harrowing things, grew tired of x, y and z, and wished they were truly unknown quantities. But the results showed, beyond doubt, that they were the fruits of zealous labor, and we cheered and rejoiced with maidens who had met the enemy and conquered. The Golf Tournament that began last Autumn, and which the Winter winds had interrupted, was finished. We had Florence Browning to congratulate, for she took the honors and the natty...
