The examination on admission was practically the same as that previously recorded, the child appearing very sick. Cultures from the throat showed streptococcus hemolyticus. A blood culture was taken and showed many colonies of the same organism. The urine showed albumin, with hyalin and granular casts; the blood count 23,000 leukocytes, with 76 per cent. polymorphonuclears. Two days later the spleen became palpable and there were many petechial spots around the ankles and on the abdomen. The child s general condition was considerably worse, the temperature ranging as high as 106 with wide remissions, the child having a general convulsion. A day later the right elbow became red and hot and swollen and subsequently was incised and pus obtained which also showed streptococcus hemolyticus. At this time, on...
